I was one of the early settlers in Baxter Springs—had taken up some town lots, built a house, and started in the grocery and provision business. We, the first settlers, were nearly all strangers to each other. There were but two men in the place with whom I had been intimately acquainted be me to Baxter Springs, and was intending to start back to Lawrence in a fore coming there. These were Ben, ing to start back to Lawrence in a Gump, whom I had known as a Lieu-few days for some more goods and my Gump, whom I had known as a Lieu-tenart in the 1st Indian regiment at Fort Gibson, Cherokee Nation, during the war, and Albert Willard, who, with his own train of four-mule teams, had been engaged in freighting between Forts Scott and Gibson at the same opportunities to send by some reliable opportunities to send by some reliable

But which ones could it be was a question we were daily asking ourselves.

As I have said, we were nearly all street from me and was selling general merchandise. He and I had become quite intimate. He was running short of some needed goods, and, knowing that I was expecting soon to go to Lawrence, had requested me to carry up some money for him—about $1.000 —go on to Leavenworth, pay his bills there, and order another lot of goods for him; and I had promised him that I would do so.

As I have said, we were nearly all strangers to each other, and each seemed afraid to express his suspicions—if he had any—to another, lest he might be talking to one of the outlaws or one of their friends, and might incur the vengeance of the gang. I knew that my friends Gump and Willard were trustworthy, but there were three men in the piace of whom I had had some slight knowledge at Fort Gibson during the then recent civil war, whose reputation was rather "shady." They were renegade Texans, who had deserted from the rebels just before the war ended, like rats deserting a sinking ship, and while hanging a round Fort Gibson had been strongly to get off? I wish you would not return that I was astenished at his compromising me in this way by announcing in the hearing of such men that I was soon to carry a large sum of moncy to Leavenworth for him, is putting it mildly.

The book is bound in cloth, with a fine colored picture of the battle of the Monitor and Merrimac on the cover. It centains 64 Hlustrations in halitone work, showing the interior and exterior of the buildings; also views of the grounds and bay of Hampton Roads. The 28 chapters give a description of every department; also an introduction which explains how a veteran may become a member, and gives a history of the early organization of the National Homes in general. It is a book that should be read by every veteran, as also by those who tave had friends who lived and died here, showing how they were cared for in sickness as well as in health. The main object of the author is to remove the false impression that largely prevails that our Homes are only almshouses for hobos and the like, thereby preventing many from the better walks of life, who in their old age have been thrown out of positions by the truits and corporations as being too old; where to go confronts them, their homes broken up, and in many cases no income but their pensions; their children married off—in many cases their life companions gone; and while no/doubt children are willing but not able to provide a home, the veteran has his self-respect and independence remaining. Here they can find comforts and everything provided, and all their pension for pocket money to do with it as they please. The climate is mild in Winter and pleasant in Summer, the east air giving coolness and vigor to those broken in health, and the bay affords a moving panorama of the ships of our Navy, etc., as the Home is located immediately on the water front of Hampton Roads.
